Recruitment Process

When a company needs to recruit new people, it may advertise the job in newspapers, online or find a suitable person within the company. People who are interested in a job can apply for it by sending in a letter of application or covering letter and a CV or a resume containing details of their education and experience. The CV presents qualifications and skills to the employer. The CV demonstrates the suitability of an applicant for the job. The covering letter is as important as the CV. It is the first direct contact between a candidate and an employer. If this letter is not well written and presented, it will make a poor impression.

The recruitment process for most organizations is standard - applications are received either online or by post. Then candidates are invited for an interview. The purpose of an interview is to give a selector a chance to assess the applicant, and for the applicant to demonstrate abilities and personality. It is also an opportunity for the applicants to make sure that the organization and the position are what they want. The employer tries to find out as much information as possible about the applicant's work background, especially work habits and skills. The applicant's replies are evaluated and the applicant is asked to check back later if he is selected.
